The North Bank of the Miami River has a rich (but often ignored) 2,000-year history of continuous human occupation, connecting the Tequesta and Seminole Indians, Spanish missionaries, African slaves and white slaveholders, Bahamian wreckers, outlaws, runaways, American soldiers, and others. Ethnohistorian Andrew Frank, who specializes in the history of the Florida Seminoles and the Native South, explains how so-called “pioneers” of the late nineteenth century in Florida—including industrialist Henry Flagler and businesswoman Julia Tuttle—chose the location of modern Miami, in part, because of the legacies of earlier settlers.

Andrew Frank is the Allen Morris Professor of History at Florida State University. He is the author of a number of books, including Before the Pioneers: Indians, Settlers, Slaves, and the Founding of Miami, The Routledge Historical Atlas of the American South, and Borderland Narratives: Exploring North America’s Contested Spaces, 1500-1850.

Florida is in many ways both the oldest and newest of the megastates. Once an insect-ridden swampland, it is now a top destination for tourism, business, agriculture and innovation. The influences of a colorful cast of characters—from cultural icons to political heroes, and even a socialist dictator—have transformed the peninsula. Former United States Senator George LeMieux and Florida-based journalist Laura Mize tell the stories of twenty-five trailblazing individuals who have changed the state forever, from a Barbados native who rescued Florida's orange industry after a catastrophic freeze in 1835 to a Florida doctor who developed a precursor to modern air conditioning.

George S. LeMieux, a native Floridian, is chairman of the Board of Directors of the Gunster law firm based in West Palm Beach and founder of the LeMieux Center for Public Policy at Palm Beach Atlantic University. Laura Mize is a Naples-based freelance journalist who has written extensively about Florida business, culture, food, and agriculture.
